

Sometimes Christmas arrives exactly when you need it most. Even in July.

Margot Pine came to Harbor's Hope with a clipboard, a schedule, and one goal: prove she can still trust herself after a business betrayal nearly cost her everything.

Evan Cole has spent five years keeping the world at arm's length. Since losing his wife in a tragic accident, the marina has been easier to manage than his grief, and solitude has become a way of life.

When a Christmas-in-July festival brings them together, neither expects the friendship that begins to grow between them. But as last-minute disasters, unexpected challenges, and a missing ornament collection threaten the event, Margot and Evan find themselves relying on each other more than either intended.

Learning to trust again is never simple.

Yet somewhere between sunrise coffees, quiet conversations on the dock, and the magic of a small town determined to celebrate Christmas in the middle of summer, both begin to wonder if second chances are still possible.
